Several days ago, the question of what to do with Leaf Miners in Hollies came up. The leaf miner at this time of year disfigures the foliage quite heavily. It only takes a few to start a heavy infestation. Now is a good time to look over your Hollies and if the leaf miners are present, spray in late April or early May with 25 per cent E. C. Diazinon. Another way to determine the time of spraying is as soon as the plant stops flowering.

In 1964, 52 percent of the Virginia flue-cured crop was planted with Coker 319. It's estimated that 54 percent of the crop will be in this variety in 1965.

Prices for feeder pigs in March were higher than for the two previous years. Prices at the four sales averaged $19.05 per head. The number sold in March was down 37 percent from a year ago. Prices are expected to remain strong throughout the year. As I've indicated before, feeder pigs have a place on many Appomattox Farms.

The first and third place winners in the 1964 Virginia 4-H 50-day liter weight contest are Appomattox boys. Frank Roy Ransom is in first place. He raised 13 pigs that weighed 718.5 lbs. at 56 days of age. Johnny Gold is third place winner. He raised 11 pigs that weighed 534 lbs. at 56 days of age. These boys are demonstrating that pigs can be grown at a rapid rate. These are the kinds of pigs that will make any farmer money on today's market. Each of these boys had a Hamp-York Cross gilt that was bred to a Duroc.

Meat is being checked for pesticide residue. In one state, slaughtered cattle have been found with residues and unfortunately, they came from Virginia. We know that peanut bulls and apple pomace usually contain residues, therefore, under no condition should they be fed. Since the use of chlorinated hydrocarbons constitute a danger, they are no longer recommended as insecticides for cattle. This group includes DDT, Lindane and Toxaphene.

Test programs carried out over the past few years indicate that Bidrin Systemic insecticide is when used in conjunction with beetle - developed injection techniques will give control of Dutch Elm Disease through insect Vector control. The use of this material is restricted to personnel who have attended a course of instruction in its use.

Nationally, the carry - over of soybean was 6 percent less than a year ago. Soybean oil prices are up 4c a pound over a year ago. In 1955, Virginia grew 18,-569 acres; in 1964, 320,000 acres were grown. It's a 20 million dollar industry for Virginia Economists at VPI say that soybeans will increase in importance in Virginia in the years ahead. The outlook for the Virginia industry is one of continued growth and prosperity. Appomattox farmers can share in this crop. Most farms have soils that will produce this crop. Lime is important to beans. A soil test should be made and needed lime applied now.

College costs are rising. They have more than doubled since 1940 and by 1975 they are expected to double again. It's obvious should average about $1800 state supported institutions $2,-600 for private institutions. 40 per cent of qualified Virginia high school students do not attend college. A new circular is now available from our office "Financing your College Education" Parents who are facing this problem should get a copy and discuss with their young people, some of the possibilities.

Centennial Hair-Do

Mrs. Robert Austin, of Appomattox, not only has a Centennial dress for the upcoming Commemoration of the End of the War Between the States — she also has an appropriate hairdo to go with her outfit. Fashioned from her mother's hair is this additional "hair-piece," shown above, which gives her an authentic look of the 1860's. The Appomattox Beauty Shop beauticians "put their heads together," to phrase it one way, in order that Mrs. Austin would have a true-to-life 1860-65 hairdo.

Lorrie Gregory show, Channel 7, Roanoke, will feature Mrs. Fred Lawson, president of the Junior Woman's Club; Mrs. Gladys Moon, Woman's Club member and local artist; and others, including at least one member of the County Civil War Centennial committee, according to current plans.

Pamphlets Go On Display

Social Security information, in the form of pamphlets and types of literature is being offered everyone in the Social Security Administration. Helping to set up the pamphlet rack in the Post Office here is William Allister, Social Security field representative, shown Mr. Allister says that in addition to the pamphlets here, persons can go directly to the Social Security office in Lynchburg for further information. The street address is Langhorne Road.—(VI 7-8856 or for direct dialing 1-800-552-3672). At present there is no Social Security representative in Appomattox, as was formerly the case. In the track there are Social Security "filing instructions" which will know exactly what to have with him when he goes to the Lynchburg office to apply for Social Security benefits.

Memoirs Tells Of Appomattox

WAYNESBORO, March 27 — The handwriting is an old letter is Gen. William Mahone's and it describes a meeting with Gen. Robert E. Lee a short distance from Appomattox Court House a few hours before the Civil War would end.

Lee stood by a fire warmin against the chill April morn He was considering what should be done about Gen. U. S. Grant's demand for surrender.

To General Mahone the weary Confederate leader said: "You know that I always send for you when I am in trouble."

This account of the meeting of the two generals in April 1865 is described in Mahone's memoirs which have just come to light.

The observations were written a while after the war by the bearded Mahone who had fought in the war from the beginning but had not excelled until later in the war at the battle of the crater at Petersburg.

Mahone's recollection of the meeting with Lee continues:

"General Grant has demanded the surrender of the army and I want to know what you advise me it", Mahone's papers quote Lee.

"My reply was let (me) warm my hands before the chattering and you may think I am scared", General Mahone wrote.

"The truth is I had passed that horrible stage."

Soon Mahone had collected his thoughts enough to give General Lee an answer which in large measure set out the terms under which General Lee told General Grant the next day he would surrender his Confederate army.

The meeting of the two Confederate generals was a dramatic, their conversation and other events in the last days of the end of the Civil War are contained in an unpublished memoirs written several years after the surrender by Mahone while he was serving as United States Senator from Virginia.

The 72-page memoirs written on stationery of a Washington hotel are on loan to Thomas Henry Jr., a Waynesboro Civil War enthusiast, from General Mahone's great-grandson, William L. McGill, of Charlottesville.

Also contained in the Mahone material which Harry has is the parole given by Lee's forces to Confederate leader said: "You are hereby informed that you will not be disturbed by the United States authorities so long as you conform to the conditions herein specified and to the laws in force where you may reside."

Mahone told Lee he should have disbanded Jefferson Davis' orders, and instead "held a conference with his (Lee's officers— told them the situation and they would have commissioned him in behalf of the army to see Grant and effect a settlement". Mahone's suggestion, had it been carried out, would have amounted to treason.
